The following is a little fairy tale for your enjoyment submitted by Holger Mirow to the Newsletter and printed for your enjoyment.

THE RAINBOW FISH - A TALE ABOUT THE INEPS-FAMILY FOR THE EVALUATION OF THE SEMINAR

The Rainbow fish was living in the big ocean and he was very proud of his scales.

He was very proud, because he thought that he was very beautiful, but at the same time he felt very lonesome...

One day he decided: "I have to change my life". He swam to the other fishes and offered them some of his scales.

He made a surprising discovery: The other fishes thought the same way! But they all had their eyes half closed - so they couldn't see the beauty of each other. When they finally opened their eyes and saw the beauty of each other they started to exchange scales.

They felt that this exchange makes them more colourful and beautiful. And at the same time they developed new patterns to arrange the scales. Their new patterns, which came up from the process of exchange, gave them a common goal.

So the happy end of his story is dialectic: While they learned to appreciate their diversity they gained unity and common strength.
